Chinese animal representations in public space
This lecture presents the Chinese animal representations in public space. Does the “public space” mean the same like “out of the door”? Some public spaces in early China were still limited to certain persons like the King or the peoples in his surroundings. That’s why the animals were sometimes special. For example Dragon’s and Phoenix’s etc. The interesting questions are, which animals pass to which function, if the animal shown by nature, where should we find animal representations out of the door?
