Female power and gendered meanings
in Mongolian tea practices

In this presentation, I will primarily describe tea practices in Mongolia, a country that does not grow tea (camellis sinensis) and yet where tea has become a cultural icon (the letter ‘a’ of the Mongolian culture alphabet). The description discloses tea practices as an ensemble of social actions that have tea as a dominant symbol and are principally ascribed to women.

Secondly, the analysis of women’s experience of tea practices provides insights about female power and gendered meanings as distinctive features of female identity that women deploy as quality in social relations. Female power appears as women’s experience of impacting on social actions from a female social position. Moreover, meanings women invoke in tea practices are gendered because of the (female) position of their construction.

In conclusion, I will discuss the concept of culture as I wonder if one could indeed speak of a Mongolian tea culture.
