A study of strategic actions between local government and community in the process of social conflicts in China’s rural Tibetan areas

What are the new contradictions of rural Tibetan societies in the accelerated course of State-led urbanization? How do local government and local population negotiate and interact when dealing with social conflicts? What is the relationship between local authorities and villagers? This paper tries to examine the process of social conflicts resolution by taking a Tibetan village in Eastern Tibet as an example, and tries to explore both local government and community’s choices of various actions and strategies to meet their own ends. This study aims to provide insights into the State’s rural governance and its policies implemented and practiced on the local community during the conflict resolution in the contemporary Tibetan society.

Verbs of speech in Old Tibetan

This paper discusses some of the most commonly used speech verbs in the Old Tibetan Chronicle. Speech verbs in Tibetan have attracted very little attention from linguists and Tibetologists and research on speech verbs are extremely rare except general studies on the syntax and morphology of Tibetan verbs. Drawing on examples from the Old Tibetan sources, I explore the social deixis of speech verbs by investigating their usage with subjects of different social status. This paper will also make some observations on the changes took place in the meaning and form of the speech verbs such as gsungs and rmas later in Classical and Modern Tibetan.
